

EDITORS' WORD

The present number of the Estudos Kantianos journal contains a special issue devoted to an original, yet much neglected, topic, namely the relationship between Kant and Africa, taking “Africa” in the broadest sense of a geographical, historical and cultural entity. The elucidation of this relationship invites Kantian scholars to reassess the meaning and scope of Kant’s enlightened universalism, which encompasses his complex views on anthropological unity and diversity as well as on the ethical and cosmopolitical scope of European colonialism.

Besides those nine articles belonging to the special, thematic issue, there is also an article on theoretical philosophy by Jassir Hernández. Moreover, the last section of this number includes two book reviews.
